MOST BEAUTIFUL OF WOMEN

Tehuana Beauties Who Might Serve as Types of Physical Perfection.

The woman of Tehuantepec is the wonder of the land. From Rangoon right around to Tiflis I have never seen her like. E. Alexander Powell writes in Everybody's. The Circassian women have more lustrous eyes, it is true, and the Cingalese are a whit more willowy of figure; but Miss Tehuana of Tehuantepec, take her by and large, combines more physical attractions than any other woman that I know. When I have said that these Tehuana women combine the figure of an Annette Kellerman with the face and features of a Ruth St. Denis and the dignity and carriage of a Mary Garden, I have need to say but little further in their praise. Mesdames Garden, Kellerman and St. Denis are, in fact, the ones who may feel complimented by the comparison.

They are olive-skinned, are these Tehuana women, with a soft rose showing through; their eyes are big and dark and sparkling—just such eyes as the Dolores should have who swings in a hammock under the palms; their features are perfect and so are their teeth, which are kept as clean and white as though they were intended for a tooth-powder advertisement. Of statuesque build, but of little more than medium stature, with great masses of blue-black hair, exquisite limbs and smallest feet, they seem made for artists' models. If these women were to mate with Cretan men, we should have a race of demigods again.

MUSEUM MUSES.

The Living Skeleton—I don't say that you took it, but the money passed through your hands.

The Armless Wonder—Yes; but I would be false to my professional ideals had I permitted any of it to stick to my fingers.

KEEP FRESH BEEF TWO YEARS.

That fresh beef may be kept in good condition for two years or longer provided a low and uniform temperature is maintained in the chamber in which it is stored, is announced as the result of experiments carried on by the United States government. The army medical department reported that it had none of the bacteria present in meat poisoning, that the steak, while lacking in aroma, had a good flavor and compared favorably with freshly frozen beef, the slight discolorations and a general loss of water being the only gross evidence of long storage.

A CONGENIAL TASK.

He was a very quiet boy, of a studious turn of mind, and that was probably why his fond parents apprenticed him to a naturalist. In his new sphere he was willing enough but painfully slow. After giving the canary seed, a job that occupied two hours, he said:

"What will I do now?"
"Well," replied his master, reflectively, "I think you may take the tortoise out for a run."—Tit-Bits.

THE MILLENNIUM.

"When will the lion and the lamb lie down together?"
"When the critics and the authors cease fire."

THE UNSUSPECTING ONE.

"That turkey of yours gobbles quite cheerfully."
"Yes. That turkey of mine is a wonderful optimist."

SAME THING.

"Do you believe in basiation?"
"No."
"Do you believe in kissing?"
"Yes."

SHE TOOK A RIDE

When the Yorick family's telephone rings it is answered by whoever chances to be nearest.

The housemaid pronounces the family name "Jorick," so no one ever confuses her with the rest of the household. Also, Yorick has a deep bass which is easily recognizable. But Mrs. Yorick and Miss Yorick have voices that are much alike, the result being that there are many amusing mistakes over the wire.

One day last week, directly after luncheon, both Mrs. Yorick and Constantina started upstairs to dress for the street. It was the maid's afternoon out, so when the phone rang Constantina hurried down to the library, although her hair was uncoiled and her mouth was full of pins. She displaced the pins with care and took up the receiver.

"Yes," she said, sweetly, "this is Mrs. Yorick's residence. Yes. Oh, yes, coal. Tomorrow? Very well, I'll tell her and let you know. Good-by."

She ran upstairs again and began to brush her hair violently, being late. Constantina was going to the matinee and Mrs. Yorick was going out to see her daughter, Evelyn, who is married and lives on the north side. The married daughter, Mrs. Delfort, was confined to the house with a cold and was languishing for companionship.

"It was the ice company," Constantina explained to her mother, who was shoe hunting in the floor of the adjoining clothes closet, "and they want to sell us our winter coal."

"Coal?" inquired Mrs. Yorick, emerging from the closet, flushed and disheveled.

Constantina nodded. Mrs. Yorick straightened herself with a shake and jabbed four hairpins into place.

"Did I understand you to say that the ice company wished to supply us with coal?"

Constantina nodded again.

"Did you ever!" commented Mrs. Yorick with disgust. "As if their ice didn't melt fast enough as it is! There goes that telephone again."

This time it was the wrong number. When it rang the third time Mrs. Yorick herself rose. "I'll go, dear," she said. "Your puffs fell behind the bureau."

Then she went downstairs. "Yes," she said when she reached the phone. "This is Mrs. Yorick. Oh, Dr. Delevan. To Evelyn's? I was getting ready to go this minute. Yes, indeed; thank you. In half an hour!"

At this moment Constantina descended, ready to go. "It was young Dr. Delevan," her mother informed her. "He said he was driving north this afternoon, and he thought I might like to go to Evelyn's. It happens most conveniently and is very kind of him, is it not?"

Constantina smiled with pleasure at the doctor's courtesy and departed in pursuit of her appointment.

Thirty minutes later Mrs. Yorick greeted Dr. Delevan in the drawing room.

"It was so nice of you," she assured him as she drew on her gloves. "The weather is still delightful for driving, with plenty of wraps. And I am ready on time, you see."

The doctor appeared slightly embarrassed. "Is Miss Constantina—er—would she care to go, too, do you suppose?" he inquired.

"She has gone to the matinee," Mrs. Yorick told him smilingly, "or she would be charmed."

Upon reaching Evelyn's she sought her daughter's room.

"Is that you, Con?" called Evelyn's voice to the approaching footsteps. "I'm in the south room. Why, mother, I'm so glad you came, too."

"Too," repeated Mrs. Yorick, wondering. "You weren't expecting Constantina, were you? She's at the matinee."

"But," began Evelyn, in perplexity, "Dr. Delevan told me he was going to ask Con to motor out with him this afternoon. I thought—"

She paused. Her mother swallowed twice and regarded her fixedly for a moment. "I see it all!" she said, finally, with a gasp of amusement. "It was Constantina he asked for—Miss Yorick, not Mrs. Yorick. That telephone is defective. It's an outrage! I shall have a man come tomorrow to fix it."

She sat down suddenly and began to laugh.

"After all," she said when her voice returned, "there is no harm done, though the joke is on me. Con has always protested that Dr. Delevan's attentions were much too impersonal to be flattering, and if he wishes to communicate with the Yorick family by phone he must do so at his own risk."

Apparent Disagreement.

Oldcommutte—I've been living in Surbanville now for about three years. Newcommutte—Three years? Why, the other day you told me you had moved there five years ago. Oldcommutte—That's all right; but you must remember that I have lived about two years on the trains, going and coming.

LITTLE KNOWN BLACK RACE

American Consul at Lorenzo Marques Tells Interesting Story About People of Angoche.

An interesting story is told by the American consul at Lorenzo Marques about the little-known people in the Angoche, East Africa, who were recently visited for the first time by Europeans. The Europeans visited a village, where the tents were surrounded by hundreds of blacks, many of whom had never seen a white man. When a chief was presented, the white strangers were informed that a drink might be offered him. This being done, the glass was quietly handed to the court taster, who, blandly taking the risk of poison, promptly drained it, whereupon the chief took the bottle. Among the women of Angoche, it is customary to paint the face with a peculiar paste that stays cold on the face for hours, and that, when dry, turns a dazzling white. As the expedition was about to start from a village, the women and sightseers crowded in closer and closer, and a baby, seeing a white man for the first time, burst into shrieks of terror. A penny was thrown to the baby, and immediately every mother started pinching her offspring to make it cry.

SEEN FROM UP IN THE AIR

Johnstone, Who Has Been Higher Up Than Anyone Else, Says Earth Looked Concave.

Johnstone, who has been higher up in the air with a clear view beneath than any other human being of whom we know, declares that the earth presented to him the appearance of a great concave bowl instead of appearing as the outside of a globe. We do not know that there was anything the matter with Johnstone's eyes, and presume that the earth would present the same concave appearance to anybody else who happened to be a couple of miles up in the air looking down.

We call attention to the matter only to emphasize the importance of the old adage relative to not believing all that you see. Proving that the earth is round by noting the disappearance of ships over the horizon is just as likely to be erroneous as proving the earth concave because it looked that way to Johnstone, and Johnstone had a better chance to see the earth than any man who has gone before. The eye at the best is a treacherous organ, not to be trusted at all in many cases, easily fooled, as Edison proved so ably when he discovered the secret of moving pictures.—Charleston News and Courier.

IMPRESSING MARY.

A colored lady from the interior of Virginia had her first view of the ocean the other day. She stood on the porch of the cottage where she was to cook for a few months and took one short glance at the sea, which was calm and quiet that afternoon. Then she turned away.

"Well, Mary," said her mistress, "what do you think of the sea?"

"Peas to me, it's awful flat," replied Mary, and she went into the house without another look.—Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post.

TASTES ARE ECLECTIC.

Miss Anne Morgan, the daughter of the millionaire of New York, has varied tastes, it would seem. Recently she came home from Europe, having in her possession an antique crucifix, which she brought in duty free, as all things made more than twenty years ago may come in free. She also brought some very pretty and very tiny dogs. When Miss Morgan is at home she takes an interest in working girls and woman suffrage and other subjects interesting to her sex.

HER OWN FAULT.

"You promised when I married you that you would give me everything I want."

"I'd do it, too, except for one thing."

"And what is that?"
"You are always wanting more things than I can give you."
